FACTS and FANCIES
(By Mack)

Cheer up, no matter how dark the night, there's always moonshine.

Perhaps "Pussy foot" Johnson came back to this country to get both eyes fixed alike.

With a little more practice in proving that the war has been a failure Admiral Sims will be able to qualify as a republican presidential candidate.

Jews ask aid from America runs head line—What's that for, don't they own it now.

If any of the republicans in the state haven't received their appointment as Colonel on Governor Morrow's staff they shouldn't feel neglected. The Governor hasn't come to their names yet.

Commissioner of public property at Lexington states there were over a hundred empty whiskey bottles taken from one party in that city. Is it any wonder that they are forming friendship clubs.

Feathers on their shoes is the latest fad for the girls Lone brave designer suggested they wear wings on their shoulders and police protection is the only thing that saved him.

Why don't the republicans nominate Booker T. Washington for President, he couldn't be any deadlier than their leading aspirant.

If automobile owners continue to look in their gasoline tanks with a lighted match, the oil companies will soon declare another big dividend.

We suggest that during the paper shortage that the merchants discontinue sending out "duns".

The race followers at Lexington must have drank up that city's supply of "booze" Lexingtonians are forming a friendship club to explore the state.

A FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCE

The latest thing in political analysis—the man who sees no longer any difference between a Democrat and a Republican—has to look no further than the House of Representatives at Washington to find an issue that has been fundamental between the two parties since the day of their birth.

A bill, providing a bonus of something like $2,000,000,000 for soldiers who served in the late war is to be passed, and the House is just now wrestling with the problem of where to get the money to meet the appropriation.

The Republicans propose that it shall be raised principally by a tax of one-half to one per cent. (the exact figure yet to be determined) upon all sales made in this country for the next year. The tax would, of course, be added to the cost of the article.

KELLER'S

"THE QUALITY HOUSE THAT SERVICE BUILT"

and would fall upon that oppressed and long suffering individual, the ultimate consumer, who usually bears the burden of taxation.

The Democrats are contending that the revenue shall be derived by a tax on war profits, and not on individual sales. They believe that those who were made rich out of the war should furnish the money to pay for the sacrifices of those who served in the war. They point to the fact that the war created 23,000 new millionaires in the country, and it is these men, not the common people, who should bear the burden of this new taxation.

This is the issue, stated briefly, which is now joined in the House of Representatives at Washington. It is but the repetition of the age old fight between Democracy and Republicanism. Democracy, the party of the masses, believes in taxing the classes. Republicanism, the party of the classes, stands for taxation of the masses.

The voters of Kentucky would do well to watch the outcome of the fight in the House, and see for themselves how the representatives of the two parties line up on it.

The Democratic party has no desire to persecute legitimate business, but it believes that the men who grew rich out of the war should pay its cost, and that it should not fall upon the great masses of our population.
